"Introduction to World Music" is designed to increase your knowledge and appreciation of the vast amount of "World" music that exists. It is also intended to provide the basic tools necessary to undertake a rudimentary study of any type of music from any culture. All cultures have some form or forms of music that are important to them for either secular or sacred reasons. "Introduction to World Music" will give you the opportunity to listen to music from several cultures around the globe, and learn why they are valuable, logical, and perhaps beautiful to the cultures that created them.

This course is an introduction to, and survey of, music and related culture from several continents around the world. It is an introduction to ethnomusicology, a discipline that studies music within the context of the culture that has created it. This requires a basic knowledge of music theory and terminology, which will be covered briefly at the beginning of this course. The bulk of the course material will be a series of case studies from several continents. It is necessary to listen often to musical examples to appreciate and understand the differing aspects of the music we will discuss. Listening questions will be on all exams!

The essay will be a formal paper based upon field research that you will perform by attending at least one cultural event of ethnomusicological significance. The paper will be five pages in length, or a minimum of 1250 words, and topics must be chosen in consultation with the instructor. Papers must be typed, and are due on April 12.

Progression Policy: This is Fine Arts Department policy. All students who are absent from more than 20% of this class may be told to leave the class. If students fail to complete and submit 85% of the graded requirements of the term mark, they will not be allowed to write the final exam, or complete the course. In such a case, the student will automatically receive a failing grade of DB (debarred). See P. 29 of the 2000-2001 Calendar for more details. Students should receive timely notice if they fall below the 85% submission requirement. You have the right to appeal to the registrar should you be told to leave the class.

It is a Fine Arts Department guideline that students will lose 10% a calendar day for submitting projects after the due date. After ten days, a grade of zero (0%) will be recorded.

You will receive two classes' notice for each unit quiz that we will write.
